[DDN-NEWS:TAC-LOGIN.DOC]

FEATURES OF THE TAC ACCESS CONTROL SYSTEM (TACACS)

To log in to the network via a MILNET TAC, you MUST have a unique ID and Access Code (TAC Access Card). These cards are issued by the DDN Network Information Center (NIC) only after a user has been authorized by the Host Administrator of the host on which the user has his primary mailbox or account.

IF YOU HAVE NOT RECEIVED YOUR TAC ACCESS CARD, AND HAVE A LEGITIMATE REQUIREMENT TO ACCESS THE NETWORK VIA A MILNET TAC, CONTACT YOUR HOST ADMINISTRATOR! (DO NOT CONTACT THE NIC FOR AUTHORIZATION).

If you do not know who your Host Administrator is, you may find out by using the "WHOIS" command on the NIC.DDN.MIL host. Instructions on using "WHOIS" are as follows: When you finish reading this message, type "quit" as instructed. After the connection to NIC.DDN.MIL is closed, type "@n" again. You will be told how to find your Host Administrator. When finished, type "logout<RETURN>" at the prompt and you will be returned to the TAC.

TACACS, the access control system for MILNET TACs, requires you to log in before a connection to a host may be completed. The login process is automatically started with the first @open (@o) command you issue. There is a @close (@c) command to close the TAC connection and also a @logout (@l) command to logout. Otherwise, the functioning of the TAC is essentially unaffected by the access control system.

Here is a sample of the login dialogue:

First, the command to get the TAC's attention is Control-Q.

(a) PVC-TAC 111 #: 01   This is the last line of the TAC herald, which the TAC uses to identify itself. When you see the herald, the TAC is ready for your command.

(b) @o 26.2.0.8<RETURN>   The user inputs the command to -------------------   open a connection plus the internet address of the host to

                                        MILNET.TXT
                                        which he wishes to connect, followed by a Carriage Return.

(c) TAC Userid: SAMPLE.LOGIN<RETURN> Here the TAC prompts the user for -------------------- his Userid.  The user enters his ID exactly as shown as shown on his TAC Access Card, followed by a Carriage Return.

(d) Access Code: 22bgx4467<RETURN>   Again the TAC prompts the user,
                 ----------------    who responds by entering his Access Code as shown on his TAC
                                     Access Card, followed by a Carriage Return.

(e) Login OK                         The TAC validates the ID/Access TCP trying...Open                code and proceeds to open the requested connection.

HELPFUL INFORMATION:

When entering your TAC Userid and Access Code:

- A carriage return terminates each input line and causes the next prompt to appear.

- As you type in your TAC Userid and Access Code, it does not matter whether you enter an alphabetic character in upper or lower case.
  All lower case alphabetic characters echo as upper case for the Userid.

- The Access Code is not echoed in full-duplex mode. An effort is made to obscure the Access Code printed on hardcopy terminals in half-duplex mode.

- You may edit what you type in by using the backspace (Control-H) key to delete a single character.

- You may delete the entire line and restart by typing Control-U.
  A new prompt will appear.

- While entering either the TAC Userid or Access Code, you may type Control-C to abort the login process and return to the TAC command mode. You must interrupt or complete the login process in order to issue any TAC command.

- The @reset (@r) command resets the TAC and returns you to the TAC welcome banner.

IF YOU HAVE A PROBLEM WITH TAC LOGIN:

Should the login sequence fail (as indicated by the response "Bad login"), examine your Access Card carefully to ensure that you are entering the ID and Access Code correctly. Note that Access Codes never contain a zero, a one, a "Q" or a "Z", as each of these characters may be mistaken for another character. If you see what appears to be one of these characters in your access code, it is really the letter "O" (oh), or "G" (gee), the letter "L" (el), or the number "2" (two).

If you have followed all of the above steps as indicated, and if you are sure you are entering your ID and Access Code correctly, and you still cannot log in, call the Network Information Center at (415) 859-3695 or (800) 235-3155 for help.

AFTER LOGGING IN:

Your TAC port will remain logged in as long as you have an open connection. If you close the connection, you will have ten minutes in which to reopen a connection without having to log in again. If you do not reopen a connection within ten minutes, the TAC will attempt to hang up your port, and will automatically log you out.

WHEN YOU ARE FINISHED:

Always close the connection using "@c" then log out using the "@l" command.
Typing "@r" (reset) has no effect on your logged-in status.
